Chris Davis is Of Counsel at Cravath, Swaine & Moore, where he supports clients across a broad range of intellectual property and technology issues related to corporate transactions, including mergers and acquisitions, spin-offs and separations and private equity transactions, as well as complex licensing, technology development and commercial services arrangements in connection with collaborations and joint ventures. Additionally, he advises on litigation matters with a focus on copyright and trademark disputes. Prior to returning to Cravath, which is where he began his legal career, Chris spent a number of years as in-house counsel for HBO.

Recently, Chris played a significant role in obtaining judgments on behalf of two professional photographers against the appropriation artist Richard Prince, resolving claims for willful copyright infringement in a long-running and closely watched fair use case in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.
