Dean S. Marks is a copyright and content protection attorney with expertise in the film and media industry. He served as in-house counsel for more than 25 years with Warner Bros. and Time Warner, most recently as Senior Vice President, Intellectual Property. He established and guided business practices with respect to copyright, digital rights management and content protection/anti-piracy issues and worked extensively on the introduction of the DVD and Blu-ray formats and protection measures for digital streaming of audiovisual content. He also worked on domestic and international copyright policy and legislation both in Time Warner's European public policy office in Brussels and as a private sector adviser to the U.S. government delegation to the World Intellectual Property Organization ("WIPO") Diplomatic Conference, which resulted in the adoption of the WIPO Internet Treaties in 1996. From 2015 to 2017, Dean was Executive Vice President, Deputy General Counsel and Chief, Global Content Protection for the Motion Picture Association, where he headed a global team to safeguard film and television content from all forms of piracy. From 2017 until 2022 Dean served as Executive Director and Legal Counsel of the Coalition for Online Accountability, that represents copyright interests at the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers ("ICANN"). He has also been an expert for WIPO's Advisory Committee on Enforcement and various WIPO workshops. Dean has lectured and taught at numerous conferences and institutions, including an advanced copyright course at the Munich Intellectual Property Law Center. He currently serves on the Advisory Council of the DNS Abuse Institute. Dean received his Bachelor of Arts degree in International Relations from Stanford University and his Juris Doctor from Yale Law School.
