Christine is the co-head of Bird & Bird's China intellectual property team, a Band 1 practice ranked by Chambers and Legal 500. Together with association law firm Lawjay, her team has represented numerous companies in achieving excellent results of IP protection in China.

Christine has experience in assisting leading technology companies to protect their valuable innovations in the form of copyright, data rights, goodwill, trademark, design, as well as utility models and invention patents. She has worked with companies from a wide range of sectors including semiconductor, software, healthcare, chemicals, consumer and retail, and industrial machineries. Many of her cases achieved results which exceed client expectations and certainly above the average odds, including obtaining landmark damages and preliminary injunctions, patent invalidations, and difficult trade secret litigations. Apart from advising on litigation strategies, she also guides companies through other ways of monetarizing their innovations via tech deals and licensing transactions. She enjoys a collaborative approach in working with the client to understand their challenges, needs, objectives and risk appetite. Only then can the best IP strategy be devised, communicated, and executed.

Christine has been litigating cellular SEP cases from 2G to 5G. She is the lead partner in many lawsuits in China relating to standard essential patents (SEP). These cases require complex IP valuation relating to the quantum of global royalties for fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory (F/RAND) licenses for patent portfolios of companies.
